Horror fiction is a genre of literature that intends to frighten its readers and it often involves supernatural and non-supernatural characters. Focusing on death and the afterlife, this genre is rooted in folklore and religious traditions. The Castle of Otranto, by Horace Walpole, is generally regarded as the novel which initiated this literary genre. Published in 1764, it remained extremely popular from its release until the mid-19th century. The novel blended fantastic situations, such as walking paintings and helmets falling from the sky, with realistic human characters, who reacted to such events in a seemingly natural way. Walpole also included religious motifs throughout the novel.

William Shakespeare was born in Stratford-upon-Avon, allegedly on April 23, 1564. Church records from Holy Trinity Church indicate that he was baptized there on April 26, 1564. Young William was born of John Shakespeare, a glover and leather merchant, and Marry Arden, a landed local heiress. William, according to the church register, was the third of eight children in the Shakespeare household —three of whom died in childhood. John Shakespeare had a remarkable  of success as a merchant, alderman, and high bailiff of Stratford, during William's early childhood. His fortunes declined, however, in the late 1570s. For all his  and celebration, William Shakespeare remains a  figure with regards to personal history. There are just two primary sources for information on the Bard: his works, and various legal and  documents that have survived from Elizabethan times. Naturally, there are many gaps in this body of information, which tells us little about Shakespeare the man.
