MIT Sloan is about invention. It's about ideas made to matter. Here, we discover tomorrow's interesting and important challenges. We go where we want to have an impact. And then, we invent the future.

At MIT Sloan, leaders come together to solve the most complex problems and bring solutions out into the world to improve today and advance tomorrow.

What will you do with an MBA from MIT?

Imagine the possibilities. What ambitions drive you? Creating a new company from scratch?

Revitalizing a struggling organization? Solving a pressing social problem? In short, what's your plan to Invent the future. Start with yours.

You'll begin to imagine—and plan for—your future on your very first day here. Through Career Core, MBA students analyze personal strengths, interests, and values in order to effectively market themselves, and learn about the current job market and opportunities specifically for MBAs.

One-on-one career coaching. Faculty members who are also practitioners in their industry. Club events. Company presentations. These are just some of the ways MIT Sloan works with you at every stage of your journey, no matter where you want to go.

The leader in experiential learning

Action Learning embodies the MIT spirit. It really is, 'We've talked enough. Now let's get out of the classroom and roll up our sleeves. We need to get things done.'

Ken Young | MBA '14, Senior Director, Nike, Inc.

MIT's motto, mens et manus, translates from Latin to mind and hand. With intention, MIT's founders were promoting, above all, that education was for practical application. At MIT Sloan, we seek to apply knowledge and skill in a way that benefits the world.

Experiential learning is a centerpiece of the MBA experience. We integrate hands-on learning opportunities throughout the curriculum. Through Action Learning labs, MIT Sloan Intensive Period, and the MIT Independent Activities Period, you practice these management skills over and over again.

First, define the problem.

From day one, MBA students are challenged to start every interaction with, "What problem are we trying to solve?" Bold leadership comes together when such brilliant minds take intelligent risks, unafraid of complexity and chaos, always searching for new and better ways.

Because we're not distracted by titles and accolades, we are free to bring together the right team to tackle the right problem—and with this as our orientation, new perspectives, answers, and opportunities emerge. This is at the heart of problem-led leadership.

You'll notice an informality at MIT born of mutual respect. Everyone here is accomplished, and everyone assumes you are, too. Our professors know that because you're at MIT, you have a hand in something both interesting and meaningful. They respect and embrace your perspective. And these researchers and industry experts, like most people here, are refreshingly down to earth.
